News From Around PA

Pennsylvania's Secretary of Education, Noe Ortega, has resigned. Eric Hagarty is the new acting secretary.

The Northern York County School District has voted down the formation of an After School Satan Club. Several districts in the county work with a Christian organization to offer off-campus religious instruction during the school day. PA law allows 30 minutes of off-campus religious instruction each week called Release Time. The mother of elementary students claimed her children were missing out on after school activities due to a lack of secular options and proposed the Satan Club. The Satanic Temple has now threatened to sue the district.

Rob Jordan, a member of the board of the LGBT Log Cabin Republicans, filed his nomination petition to run for State Rep in the 165 District (part of Delaware County). He was challenged due to the fact he has not lived in the district the required one year. The PA

Supreme Court has directed the Board of Elections to remove his name from the ballot. The other Republican, Nichole Missino, was also removed from the ballot, even though the objection to her nomination paper was not filed properly. So, there will either be a GOP write-in campaign on May 17th or the incumbent Democrat will run unopposed in the fall.
