News From Around PA

NOTE: In last week's e-newsletter, it was stated that PA banned "Gender Queer: A Memoir" and "Lawn Boy." In actuality, PA is one of 43 states that has an exemption under the obscenity law -- "Nothing in this section shall apply to any recognized historical society or museum accorded charitable status by the Federal Government, any county, city, borough, township or town library, any public library, any library of any school, college or university or any archive or library under the supervision and control of the Commonwealth or a political subdivision." Obviously, the law needs changed or enough outcry locally to get the obscene material removed!!

Recently Moon Township Public Library (Allegheny County) book of the week was "The hips on the drag queen go swish swish, swish."

As the UPenn transgender swimmer (a male pretending to be a female) continues breaking every record on the books in women's college swimming, the coach and female athletes applaud the "accomplishments." But one female swimmer reports that behind closed doors the majority of women on the swim team are very upset as they see opportunities slipping away.

The Lititz Church of the Brethren (Lancaster County) was defaced by writing satanic imagery on the back exterior wall and pavilion.

News From National Scene

Some Critical Race Theory resources used in California: "Raising Race Conscious Children," "Anti-Racism for Beginners," "Social Identities and Systems of Oppression," "Black Lives Matter Resource Guide," "The Black Radical Tradition," "George Floyd, Racism, and Law Enforcement." One lesson asks the students to write a poem discussing a world without the police or the military. Another includes writing prompts on police brutality and racist violence. Is any of this in PA?

The student government at the University of Oregon is petitioning the school to require critical race theory training for graduation.

The Illinois State University is being sued by the former assistant football coach who was fired for removing a Black Lives Matter poster, which had been placed there during his leave of absence, from his office door and replacing it with an "All Lives Matter" sign.

Teachers in Virginia are encouraged to make students aware of their "ally status" by hanging a rainbow flag and sharing their own pronouns.

A recent report "Self - Generated Child Sexual Abuse Material: Youth Attitudes and Experiences in 2020" showed that in 2019 6% of 9-12 year-olds reported sharing explicit self-generated images. In 2020 it was up to 14%. In the 13-17 year range the numbers were 15% in 2019 and 19% in 2020.
