News From Around PA

The Bread & Roses Community Fund has opened applications for the one-time Gender Justice Fund, a $10,000 grant to be awarded to “organizations working to elevate the lives of women, girls, transgender or gender-nonconforming Philadelphia-area residents.”

PA Congressman Mike Kelly has introduced HR 1881, the Child Welfare Provider Inclusion Act. It would prohibit any federal, state, or local government agency receiving federal funds to provide child welfare services from discriminating or otherwise taking adverse actions against any child welfare service provider that operates based on faith, religion, or moral convictions.

More than 200 former Pennsylvania public school employees receive pension benefits -- more than $300,000 each month combined -- despite certification sanctions following misconduct allegations, and in some cases, felony convictions.

PA’s Attorney General Josh Shapiro has joined 18 other states in opposing a US House and Human Services proposed rule that would strengthen the enforcement of existing regulations that allow providers to invoke conscientious objections as a basis for refusing to provide care that involves certain medical issues, including abortion, sterilization, assisted suicide and others.

News from National Scene

International Olympic Committee is going to lower testosterone levels for women to five nanamoles, down from ten. This will make it tougher for transgenders who are now able to compete with a ten nanamoles limit.

The ACLU is suing the state of Michigan to overturn a 2015 state law that shields faith-based adoption agencies from anti-discrimination laws, compliance of such would require them to violate their moral convictions.

In a recent interview with the website Vulture, homosexual actor and singer Ricky Martin said that he wants to “normalize” same-sex and open relationships, saying he believes that it is “good for the world.”

Homosexual activists are upset that Cary, North Carolina has been chosen by the US Soccer Federation as one of the venues for the 2018 CONCACAF women’s championship. Why? Because HB 142, which repealed HB 2, is still deemed “anti-LGBT” by those pushing this agenda. We are a non-profit organization that is totally dependent upon financial gifts from our supporters.
